Ramping Up The Cliches (I Usually Avoid Them Like The Plague)

At the end of the day, we are all in it together, trying to navigate the uncharted territory towards an uncertain future. The light at the end of the tunnel is not even on the horizon so we'll just have to take on board that we are in it for the long haul and take each day as it comes. This crisis came out of left field but I'm sure we'll all do whatever it takes to remain as fit as a fiddle as we pass through the calm before the storm, but every cloud has a silver lining and we'll be over the moon when we hear the final whistle. Some say the writing's on the wall but, right now, staying in is the new going out so, by complying with the rules, our salvation could well be in our hands.

The powers that be seem to have been taking part in a different ballgame at the advent of the crisis, didn't heed the wake-up call and failed to step up to the plate. Some blue sky thinking might lead to solutions which, without further dither and delay, could enable those in the front line to continue to make a difference. At the moment, they're not getting it done!
